We are glad that that paper has used, what it has not had heretofore-candor. We were always uncertain whether is sufficient to justify me in saying the Banner bated Democracy or most positively that I cannot and the Banner hated Democracy or loved Radicalism most. The question is now settled. It expresses its partiality for Republicanism, also keeps up its war on the Democratic party.

A PROPOSITION has been introduced in the General Assembly of France, controlled by reason, hence become which, if adopted, will entail a punishment on those who indulge too freely in the use of ardent spirits. The first offence will be punished lightly, a second by punishment and fine, and a third by a forfeiture of all electoral rights. The idea of depriving a man of his franchise rights to prevent drunkenness, is a novel one, since voting and drinking are so nearly allied.

We are more anxious for the punishment of white men who flog or kill inoffensive negroes, than any other class of criminals, of equal grade of crime; because they bring reproach upon respectable white people. We have no patience with white people who hate negroes, simply because they are free, and we rejoice that there are but few in the land. The great mass of white citizens of this county sympathize deeply with the negroes in their ignorance, superstition, and poverty, and feel for them none the less because they will not a'so cat, sleep and dwell with them.

By this, the Banner acknowledges itself, what hitherto it has not had the courage to do, a Liberal Republican. For many years before the war, Horace Maynard, to secure office, claimed to be a Southerner in feeling, and after the war, when slaveholders had nothing to give him, he acknowledged that he had always been an abolitionist. The Banner has claimed all along to be Democratic, and now all of a sudden, confesses that it needed no conversion to make it Republican.

Of course the scale of pay varies. It is just according to each man's intelligence and rapacity. A few hundred dollars in special gratuities is enough to satisfy the demands of a plantation negro. Others get more. Some of the smarter sort were accused the other day, on the floor of the House, by a colleague, with then having $12,000 of State bonds in his pocket, corruptly obtained; and the charge was not denied.

But the evidence of gross and universal corruption is palpable in the way everybody lives who has anything to do with the government. There is a happy-go-lucky air among them all. If a black gets into the Legislature, that is enough. He works no more. He has no occasion. Of course the scale of pay varies.
